Volunteers From Bed-Stuy Offer Medical Assistance In Haiti

By: NY1 News

Members from the Bedford-Stuyvesant volunteer ambulance corps are on the ground in Port-au-Prince providing medical assistance.

"We're going to the hospital. We have a tent. We're going on the street, everywhere," said one New Yorker. "We're a big team. We have 135 people here; 65 doctors and nurses and the paramedics, the EMS. We're ready to work and come and help."

"What I've seen on TV is devastating," said another. "I've seen my own people suffering and they need so much help. I think the help is moving too slow, so that's why we're here."

Meanwhile, those who spoke to NY1's team in Haiti said they were still very concerned about the lack of food and water.

They also say they want to see more heavy construction equipment brought into Port-au-Prince and the surrounding neighborhoods.
